of water for so many birds, trough space and perching space per bird are essential pieces of information in the successful poultryman's armoury.

The author wisely confines the sections on breeding and hatching to simple accounts of accepted practice. In this respect the book will exert an appeal for many apprentice poultry keepers.

Many authors of general poultry text-books obviously feel a powerful incentive to discuss fundamental principles and controversial theories on such matters as breeding and nutrition. However fascinating these subjects may be for the specialist poultryman with a leaning to scientific theory they are of no immediate importance to the poultryman faced with the task of getting through his daily chores. He wants to know that if he does a thing some other development will ensue. In the daily round he is not concerned with the reasons why that particular happening is a consequence of his actions; he is aware that there are books dealing in detail with the nature of these specialised matters if he wishes to follow them up.

The author maintains the same attitude towards poultry practice throughout. As a result the chapters dealing with building construction, recording and accounts are relatively more extensive than is customary in poultry books. This continued emphasis on practice allied with a readable style make this book eminently suitable for those whose success must depend on their abilities as practising poultrymen and women.

CONTENTS

CHAPTER	PAGE
INTRODUCTION .. .. .	II
I. BREEDS AND BREEDING .. .. .	13
Suitability for different branches of poultry husbandry. General principles of breeding. Selection of stock, including handling, for (a) stamina and health, (b) egg production, (c) table qualities. Progeny testing.
2. HATCHING AND REARING .. .. .	24
Structure and composition of an egg. Selection and care of eggs for hatching. Testing. Natural hatching. Construction of equipment and management of broody hens. Artificial hatching. Principles of incubation. Types of incubators. General management and construction of incubator rooms. Day old chicks—transfer to brooders, packing and transport. Natural and artificial rearing. Types of coops and brooders. Feeding and general management of chicks and growing stock for different requirements.
3. DUCKS, GEESSE AND TURKEYS .. .. .	40
Description of commercial breeds and crosses. Selection, hatching, rearing, housing and general management. Egg and meat production. Marketing.
4. MANAGEMENT OF ADULT STOCK .. .. .	45
General treatment and detailed management of the breeding and laying stock throughout the year. Culling.
5. SYSTEMS OF POULTRY FARMING .. .. .	52
Choice of system as affected by size of holding and type of land. Suitability of system in relation to other systems of farming; general farming, orchards and market gardens. Intensive, semi-intensive and extensive systems.
6. HOUSING AND RUNS .. .. .	59
General principles. Description and arrangement of various types. Elementary design and construction. Materials and general use. Care and maintenance.

CHAPTER	PAGE
Layout with special reference to economy and labour. Fencing and construction of runs. Area required for different systems. Management of grass, earth and covered runs.
7. ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS .. .. .	75
The keeping of financial accounts on the columnar or analytical cash book system. Recording credit sales. Drawing up an annual inventory or valuation. Trap nesting, hatching and rearing records. A general knowledge of prices, stock, appliances and feeding stuffs.
8. TABLE POULTRY .. .. .	92
Breeds and crosses for meat production. Methods of fattening. Preparation of foods. Methods of killing, plucking, shaping, trussing, packing and marketing. Housing and appliances used in preparation of table poultry.
9. FOODS AND FEEDING .. .. .	102
Description of feeding stuffs and suitability. Mixtures for different classes of stock. Mixing of foods. Wet and dry mashes. Cooking and preparation of foods. Supplementary foods. Methods of feeding. Storage of foods.
10. HYGIENE, SANITATION AND HEALTH .. .. .	115
Ventilation of houses and brooders. Water supply. Disinfection of buildings, appliances and runs. Treatment, disposal and use of poultry manure. Feeding and management in relation to disease resistance. Common diseases—diagnosis, prevention, treatment and control. Disease control legislation.
11. MARKETING .. .. .	131
General principles of buying and selling. Co-operation. Packing stations. Collecting depots. Direct sale. Grading and packing for market. Packing material. Testing of eggs. Methods of preserving eggs.

ABOUT THE BOOK

This book gives complete emphasis upon the practical aspects of poultry keeping. It sets out to inform its readers how certain tasks should be done. The text includes information about the myriad small points which face the man in the field doing the job. Such matters as quantities of water for so many birds, trough space and perching space per bird are essential pieces of information in the successful poultry-man's armoury. This books contain chapter like:

- Introduction
- Breeds and Breeding
- Hatching and Rearing
- Ducks, Geese and Turkeys
- Management of Adult Stock
- Systems of Poultry Farming
- Housing and Runs
- Accounts and Records
- Table Poultry
- Foods and Feeding
- Hygiene, Sanitation and Health
- Marketing
